Canada: Land of Adventure

Have you ever sat in your living room watching survival shows hosted by the likes of Ray Mears and Bear Grylls, secretly wishing you could have a go at getting by in the wilderness on insects and plants while reluctantly concurring with your wifes plans for yet another beach holiday? You might have even been camping in a forest with your mates in the hope of recreating a Mears like situation, building your own shelter and attempting to capture a rabbit for sustenance, all this is somewhat undermined however when you can smell the food cooking in your local Haverster just half a mile away.

Rather than going down to your local forest with your luxury tent and disposable barbeque, what you need is a truly fulfilling adventure experience. Canada is a great location to do exactly that, With tens of thousands of acres of undiscovered, unspoiled wooded areas, mountains and national parks, Canada offers the ultimate blank slate for the budding adventurer to get themselves lost in the awesome landscapes. The problem with the UK is just that it is simply not big enough to feel truly isolated, the rural dwelling population is high meaning you are always likely to come across another rambler, or a country pub!

Type in Canada holidays to your browser and you will find hundreds of adventure packages, organized enough to give you a good idea of where to start, but also remaining flexible meaning you can wonder off into the wilderness and do your own thing, if thats your bag! Canada hosts some great city breaks like Toronto Holidays, but if you fancy veering off the beaten track and leaving the modern world behind, an adventure holiday could be just the thing for you. Imagine you and few friends exploring dense pine forrestes, kayaking down beautifully clear freshwater rivers and lakes, and traversing the Rockies by rail. This would be a holiday with a difference, and certainly one youd never forget!
