Making the best use of express passport service processes -- whether they're offered by the government or from a private business -- can be a good way to get a passport quickly. In this day and age when many people have to travel with little or no notice, having the ability to get a passport quickly is vital. In fact, many more people than ever are finding themselves in this situation.

As far as obtaining an express passport or a passport that has to be expedited in a speedy manner, understand that higher fees are normally paid. This is mainly because there's a bit more work that goes into getting a passport that has to be issued on short notice. In terms of what the government charges, the standard fees can range up to $300 and more in a number of cases.

For anybody needing a passport in less than two weeks, there'll be an additional $60 charge that has to be paid. This charge goes along with the $25-to-$95 standard passport application fee. The State Department, in cases where a person is expediting the passport himself, recommends that the application and documents be sent via overnight delivery in both directions, by the way.

It's also very smart to send all fees, documents, and application forms using a traceable delivery method. This usually means paying for additional tracking from the U. S. Postal Service (if it's being sent via the mail) or one of the overnight delivery companies. It's also highly recommended that everything be sent in secure packaging, such as a Tyvek envelope.

There's also a method for receiving new passports for reason of what the government calls "life or death emergency". To receive this kind of priority attention, just contact the National Passport Application Center. A person in this circumstance can call a toll-free number to speak with a representative during normal business hours. 24/7 passport information is also available.

Outside of the services offered by passport expediting businesses, getting a passport in a single day usually involves traveling to one of 14 different regional service centers. They're located all over the country, including in New York City, Los Angeles and Chicago. Travel is generally fairly convenient, in other words, but always make an appointment before showing up with an application.

In general, paying an expediting company to obtain a passport in a single day can run from $200 to $600 or more. This is a reasonable amount for those who absolutely have to have the passport delivered to them by the next morning. Go online and check the Internet out for a number of companies currently doing business to ascertain fees and turnaround times.

In actuality, getting the right kind of express passport service doesn't have to be a super-painful experience. As long as one follows the processes and procedures as outlined on the State Department website, in fact, it generally tends to go very smoothly. In addition, choosing to take advantage of an express expeditor company may also help things along in a very convenient manner.
