There are seemingly endless things for you and your family to discover in Nova Scotia. Halifax is the capital of Nova Scotia and was first established in 1629. All sorts of entertainment exist around the city in the form of museums, theaters, public gardens, and historic locations. While Halifax is undoubtedly a large city, it still manages to retain the feel of a quaint maritime city. The Halifax Citadel National Historic Site of Canada is an old military base that is the most visited site in Canada. With many of the battlements and structures still intact, people come from all over the world to see it. The Maritime Museum of the Atlantic holds artifacts from the sunken Titanic and exemplifies the connection with the sea Nova Scotia has.

The Bay of Fundy is home to the biggest tidal range in the world. The tide of this bay comes in and is as high as a four story building. When the tide goes out, it presents the perfect opportunity to explore and search for fossils, glittering gems, and other sea treasures. The unique cliff escarpments and rock formations caused by millions of years of erosion also warrant exploration. The clean and healthy water of the Bay is home to tons of marine life, including giant whales. Finback whales, humpback whales, Right whales, and Menke whales all play and feed in the waters of the Bay.

The Tobeatic Wilderness & Southwest Nova Biosphere Reserve is a protected reserve that is just huge. 120 lakes are fed by nine major rivers that run through the reserve, where canoeing and boating are popular activities. And these aren't the only outdoor sports done in this reserve. Camping and hiking are other outdoor activities, and there are over 104,000 hectares of land to do it on, where the forests are full of moose, snakes, bears, turtles, and beautiful plant life.

Nova Scotia isn't your typical vacation destination. Save your money and avoid places where tourists flock and send yourself and your family to a place where real vacations happen. The combination of the maritime traditions, beautifully wild nature, and cozy small town atmosphere make Nova Scotia the perfect place to take a relaxing vacation. And with the help of online passport processing, you can be there in no time.
