Ways To Quickly Get An Expedited Passport Renewal

Naturally, you would never do something like this on purpose, but somehow, you noticed just before your international trip that your trusty passport is about to expire. You do not want to forego your trip, but you do not know what to do. If you cannot wait six long weeks to get a new one in the mail, then you need to take advantage of an expedited U.S. passport renewal.

Working the system to gain yourself this quick service is not always easy, and can be downright frustrating at times. But when you have an expired passport, it is possible to get yourself a new one and be on your way without delaying your flight. You have to be willing to follow the exact steps for the state that you live in. It also depends on exactly how much time you have left until you are set to take off.

If you have more than two weeks until your flight, then you should know that you do not yet qualify for an expedited version. Even though it is too late to get the regular one, it is also too early for that. The weeks in between six and two weeks before your trip are a kind of no mans land, so if you fall somewhere in there, then just sit tight for now.

Once you have reached the final countdown of the fourteen days before your flight, you can call your local government office for information on the nearest place that provides this kind of service. Plan to clear your schedule because when you call them to get your new booklet, they will assign you a date without taking your schedule into consideration. You do not get a choice of date or time as to when you can go.

When you get to the office, be sure to be prepared with exactly all of the forms, documents, and pictures that they require. In general, these places do not have a reputation of being accommodating or understanding of human nature, so no amount of apologies will make up for a forgotten document that you left on your kitchen table. They will simply take the next person in line without caring that you will now miss your trip.

If you want to save yourself all of this hassle and all of the steps involved, you might want to find a good service that can do this for you. On the internet, there are many places that claim to provide this service for a fee. Although they can be quite pricey, they also might be worth the money if you know that it is not feasible to do this yourself.

If you know that it would be hard to miss a day of work, or that you are likely to mess up the process, then definitely look into something like this. Make sure that you are hiring a company that is reputable and honest so you are not taken in by a scam. Many places are fake, but there are also real ones out there, so do your research carefully before sending in any money.

While an expedited U S passport renewal may give you a headache in the process, it can save your trip from being canceled. Although you did not happen to notice that your passport was set to expire when you booked your trip, you can redeem yourself at the last minute. Once you make it through the system, you can breathe a sigh of relief and take off on time.
